

Hectic lifestyles, emotional stress, insufficient sleep, endocrine disorder, harmful external aggressions are some of the common yet major factors affecting the instability & imbalance of skin condition. This also result to the decrease of skin protection ability, metabolism & immunity disorder.

Being part of the body structure, the SKIN, like others; participate in the whole metabolism & immune system.

PROTECTION

Flexibility & density of the horny layer, collagen in the dermal layer, tensile of the elastic fiber, elasticity & supportive cushion of subcutaneous fats, are able to resist against damages of external impact, friction & even pressure.

SENSORY

Our skin, has numerous nerves, receive external stimulation which in turn transmit the sense of touch to the brain through the sensory nerve; resulting in complex feelings such as Dry, Wet, Smooth, Rough, etc.

REGULATE SKIN TEMPERATURE

Tiny blood capillaries will expand when air temperature increases bringing about a rapid increase of blood circulation. On the contrary, when air temperature drops, circulation reduces & slowed. Fluctuation in air temperature causes loss of fluid & fats in the skin which affect the skin's regulating ability. This again, shows the importance to maintain a normal skin temperature.
